Fred Williams

Fred Williams, one of Australia's most admired artists is best known for his landscape paintings. According to him, landscapes seen from different angles affects what you see and sense. His paintings convey the feeling of a place rather than its specific detail. Williams like to explore the aesthetic potential of multiple panel drawing.

Beachscape, Erith Island 1, 1974

Junior Level - Paneled Painting

Students in Junior Years learnt how Fred Williams used colours and fast brush strokes to show depth of water and the texture of sand in his painting entitled, 'Beachscape, Erith Island 1. 1974'. They also looked at the features of various landscapes such as deserts, forests and waterfalls. The students then used chalk to draw a landscape of their choice. When completed, they cut their artwork into four panels and glued them on to coloured paper.
